female urology

Urological diseases are not only diseases of men!

Due to the anatomical conditions, women are much more frequently affected by cystitis than men. In certain phases of life, recurring urinary tract infections occur, mainly in women, which mean a real burden on life with a massive reduction in quality of life. The so-called „irritable bladder“ with a constant, tormenting urge to urinate is also a typical female urological disease that impairs the joy of life.

Urinary incontinence – the unwanted and uncontrollable loss of urine – is also a significant problem for many women. Many women prefer to talk to a woman about this disease than to a man.
